YOUR EXPERT ADVICE TO MAKE YOUR HOME COMFY AND COZY THIS WINTER

Make yourself comfortable. That's pretty much the TLDR for winter 2025 interior design.

We've reached that chilly time of remembering, dreaming, and plenty of gathering. So it's also the time of year we love to check in with interior design experts to get their hot takes on the coolest season.

We've pulled together our favorite expert trend advice, and today we'll give you a taste of what's trending in interior design for the holidays and beyond. Now's the time you get to make your home a whole lot more comfortable and cozy for the season ahead. Because — oh, so very happily — that's what's truly trending this year.

Colors Go Deep

We're going deep this season — with colors that is. April & Ashley's Tyler Francis shared the shift with Elle Decor, "Last year, minimalism was in, so we had a lot of orders for all white and cream rose tablescapes. This year, designers are leaning towards an opulent color palette in jewel tones."

Imagine you really want to rest, relax, and maybe swap stories with your nearest and dearest. You're offered two rooms, one with overhead fluorescent lights, the other with a crackling fire and plush, cozy furniture. No-brainer, right? That's also often the difference between bright tones and deep, rich jewel tones in your favorite spaces.

Design styles like dark academia, maximalism, art deco, and more, revel year-round in those jewel tones to set the stage for comfort and connection, like burgundy and hunter green beckoning you to settle in and snuggle up.

Designer, Megan Molten, puts it perfectly in Southern Living, "I've seen [burgundy] all over the markets and in fashion, which always translates into the home," adding simply it's "the new red." Color this winter with slipcovers and accents in fabrics with those deep shades in your home, too.

Maximalism Meets Your Personality

Curating cozy can come from colors, but it also comes from cultivating spaces with a cornucopia of personality and charm. The idea is to practice a kind of practical maximalism, packing personality into your design vibe without cluttering things up.

It's about filling spaces with things that bring you, well, tidings of comfort and joy, I suppose. And doing it intentionally enough that it feels on-purpose, rather than piled-on. Southern Living spoke with Thumbtack's Kendra Sinclair who shares, "As homeowners add to their holiday collection each year, focusing on layering decor keeps the vibe cozy and intentional while the surroundings are loud and luxurious."

And, for inspiration, Martha Stewart's Michele Laufik points to, "Affordable, intentional updates — like lighting, cozy textiles, and seasonal scents — are helping people embrace 'practical maximalism' without overspending." When cultivating a cozy welcome in your home, more-is-more — just do it on-purpose, and on-personality.
